The following business entities should get an EIN

1. Partnerships: an EIN is required for all general partnerships and limited partnerships.
2. Multiple-member LLCs: This type of business entity needs an EIN regardless of whether you have employees.
3. Single-member LLCs: If you plan to hire employees within the next 12 months, you will need to get an EIN. And even if your single-member LLC has no employees, and even if you can get by with using your own individual Social Security Number for tax purposes, it's still a good idea to get an EIN because many banks and lenders will prefer to use an EIN to do business with you.
4. LLC taxed as a Corporation:
If your LLC chooses to be taxed as a Corporation (for example, by electing to be treated as an S-Corporation for tax purposes), you will need to get an EIN.
5. Sole proprietorship with employees: Even if you do not have an LLC or any other legal entity for your business and you run a simple sole proprietorship, you still need to get an EIN if you have employees or plan to hire employees in the next 12 months.

Common questions about obtaining an EIN / Tax ID Number

- 01 Will I need an EIN in order to obtain a business account with a bank?
- 02 What circumstances require me to change my EIN?
- 03 When will I receive my Federal Employer Identification Number?
- 04 What is the SS4/EIN/Tax ID Number?

Federal Employer Identification Number EIN / Tax ID Number

The SS4 is the IRS form required to obtain an EIN (Employer Identification Number, frequently called a Tax ID number). The EIN/Tax ID number can be thought of as a Social Security Number for your business. It is usually required to open a bank account in the name of the business and to properly pay and account for any wage/payroll employees of your company.
